

Call For Proposals

Warfare in the Ancient Mediterranean World, A Brill Companion to Classical Studies Series

Series Editor: Lee L. Brice

Aims and Scope

The aim of the series is to publish high-quality, useful volumes each focused on a specific topic related to warfare in the ancient Mediterranean world. Where appropriate, volume coverage should include the eastern Mediterranean, including Assyria, Persia, Anatolia the Levant, and Egypt as well as Greece and Rome. The intended audience includes scholarly specialist and non-specialist students of the ancient world. Topics already published or in process include insurgency and terrorism, dealing with defeat, food and warfare, discipline/indiscipline, and Late Antiquity. We are seeking new volume proposals on a variety of topics covering a wide range of issues and methodologies. Specific topics we are interested in include: religion, topography/geography, reception of ancient warfare, medicine/death, Persia, Hellenistic world, archaeology/material culture and warfare, auxilia, the Pax Romana, navies, and peace, but we welcome proposals on any appropriate topic.

Submission of Proposals

Whole volume proposals on any appropriate topic are welcome for consideration. Proposed volumes may have one or more editors. Since these are edited volumes, submitted proposals need to include proposed organization, contributors and paragraph length abstracts of all proposed chapters. Proposals are first screened by the series editor who evaluates their pertinence and quality. If the volume proposal is deemed ready and will make a useful contribution to the series, then it will be reviewed by an outside reader. If accepted, the editor will be invited to proceed with the manuscript which is, ideally, due eighteen-twenty-four months later. All manuscripts go through peer-review. Only complete proposals for entire volumes will be accepted. Contact the series editor to submit a proposal: ll-brice@wiu.edu.
